Smith DRIA GAZETTE that no true soldier will cotthis judgment, and above all used all my powers to just the State of Virginia into the hands of the taxpayers; i. e. the rebel soldiers, rather than the non-taxpayers, who caimed to be loyal. Again I cannot be mistreken in judgment that had "old Grant" wanted 100,000 men from the South to help lick Maximillan he could have obtained them on the single condition of being permitted to fight under their own selection of officers. General Longstreet himself so impressed me in an interview with him in 1867. Grant all this, as I do, why then should the yankee soldier now make the rebel soldier such a terrible ogre and his flag a frightful bugo boo? We do not scare at the German flag, but to the centrary join the Dutchman in his dieplay of it. Why then doubt the loy-alty of the ex-Confederate because he have n memory of the past, just as the Dutchman has for his faderland, or you and I for our birthplaces or for our native States?

In sending my subordinates out among the people from July 1, '65 to '69, I always gave each this instruction: "Court the Confederate soldier for he is a gentleman and will back you." And I challenge any one to say that this Confederate did not do always and everywhere what I said he would for my officers. Under such pircumstances you will appreciate the why of my thankfulness for your courageous words.

Fraternally yours,
R. S. LAGEY.

A Remarkable Bee-Tree A writer in the Fredericksburg Star eays: "This is not given as a rival to the bird story in your last issue, but if those three thousand black birds had been bee-martine, we could have given them a feast. This tree was found by Mr. J T. Coleman, jr., last April. While looking for some sheep he came up to it to reet, and, to his delight, found the bees working about twenty feet April. While looking for some sheep he came up to it to reet, and, to his delight, found the bees working about twenty feet above the ground. As there is not much beney found in trees, at that period of the year, he resolved to let it stand until later. On last Thursday night, in company with his neighbors, he proceeded to evice the same to the undersigned, properly authenticated, for payment.

DMINISTRATORIS NOTICE—All persons indebted to the estate of william GRAY, deceased, and those holding claims against said estate to present the same to the undersigned, properly authenticated, for payment.

DMINISTRATORIS NOTICE—All persons indebted to the estate of william GRAY, deceased, and those holding claims against said estate to present the same to the undersigned, properly authenticated, for payment. his neighbors, he proceeded to enjoy that much beloved sport of "taking a bee-tree." Upon our arrival we found a large swarm of that had swarmed from the tree and settled on the lower limbs. We then went to work and hived those in the gum, which had been brought along for those in the tree. The tree was then cut down and cut into, and what a sight met our gaze—honey for five or six feet in the hollow! We took about thirty pounds of nice clean honey from it, besides arranging the tree so that the bees could resume their work. We regretted that we took it as early as we did, as there was a quantity of comb unfilled, which, if it had been allowed to remain, would have made it yield about one hundred pounds by next September. One of our crowd was a "school boy," and, judging from his timidity when the furious bees began buzz og around, concluded that he had mastered all the forms of the verb, to be, and iustead of making acquaintance with this new bee, did not try its conjugation, but elyly declined it."
